THE NEW YORKER

ART

ZAROUHIE ABDALIAN

March 5 2016 – May 14 2016

The young artist from Oakland makes her impressive New York début with a delicate exhibition in which even the sparest materials become subtly elegiac. A mortise lock, mounted to a white wall, clicks open and shut; a hunk of lava rests on the floor; a plaster statue of Janus has been cut in half and installed so its two faces confront each other. The show's title is "A Betrayal," suggesting duplicity but also disclosure.
